Quartet Meets Death When Automobile Is Hit by Train

DEATH INSTANTANEOUS

Tragedy Occurs near Absecon,
N. J.; Car Hurdled
Distance

ABSECON, N. J., June 23.—(INS)—Anthony M. Ruffo, Jr., mayor of Atlantic City, and three other persons were killed here early today when their automobile was hit by a train at a crossing.

Mrs. Margaret Siracusa, the Mayor's niece, and Mr. and Mrs. John Wiley, of Atlantic City, were the other victims. Wiley was a jitney car inspector.

The automobile was completely wrecked and the Mayor and others were instantly killed. The accident occurred at the Mill Road crossing while the party were returning from an outing at Absecon Duck Pond. They apparently failed to note the approach of the train, a Philadelphia-Atlantic City express, as they sped toward the unguarded crossing.

The car and occupants were hurled more than 100 feet and fragments of the vehicle were littered along the right of way. State troopers removed the bodies to Pleasantville, where the body of the Mayor was identified by the Coroner.

So terrific was the crash that the flyer's engine was disabled and another engine from Atlantic City was despatched to complete the train's run.

Bristol Man Arrested For Drunken Driving

TRENTON, N. J., June 23.—Andrew Sargeant, of Bristol, was arrested early this morning by Police Chief Walter and Patrolman Munder on the charge of drunken driving. Police say he was driving in a reckless manner on South Broad street at Hamilton avenue and that he ran upon the sidewalk. His car was damaged in climbing the curb.

Sargeant was taken to the Second District station, where he was examined by Dr. Carroll. He was ordered held for trial.

RIVERSIDE THEATRE

Richard Barthelmess' expert horsemanship stood him in good stead during the filming of "Son of the Gods," his newest starring feature which comes to the Riverside Theatre tonight for a three-day run.

The production opens with a thrilling polo game between two college teams. Barthelmess in the role of Sam Lee is the star of one team and is called upon to make several spectacular plays. Having received his training as a boy at Hudson Military Academy, Barthelmess is an excellent horseman.

The sporting sequences were filmed at the polo grounds of the Uplifters Ranch at Santa Monica, an exclusive California country club. Regular polo games were played between the Uplifters' team and the Army team from the presidio at Monterey. The scenes were recorded with sound and dialogue via the Vitaphone system.

"Son of the Gods" is based on the sensational Rex Beach novel, with Constance Bennett in the feminine lead heading an exceptionally large supporting cast of twenty prominent film players. Frank Lloyd directed.

President of the Bristol Quoit League, Samuel Shire, is well pleased with the showing made Saturday by the locals when they played against the Strawberry Mansion Quoit Club, which club constitutes the champions of Philadelphia. The result was 921 for the Philadelphians, and 778 for Bristol, a difference of 143 points, or about 2½ points a game. The Philadelphians have been playing for 20 years. At the conclusion of the games a lunch was served in the Legion Home here.

Games are being arranged for with the Bartlam Quoit Club of Philadelphia, and if plans are completed this contest will be on the Philadelphia club's grounds; with probably a return game here. A return game is also looked for at the pits of the Strawberry Mansion Quoit Club group.

Woman Falls From Car; Dies in Trenton Hospital

A peculiar accident resulted fatally yesterday for Mrs. Joseph Gaskill, 78, who resides along the Morrisville-Tullytown Road. The accident took place on the State Highway near Florence, N. J.

Mrs. Gaskill together with her husband, her brother, Mrs. Helen Kemble, and the latter woman's two children, William and Catherine, went motoring yesterday in South Jersey, the victim occupying the front seat with her husband. When they were near Florence on the return trip, Mrs. Gaskill was holding on to the handle of the front door.

The door suddenly flew open in some manner not accounted for and Mrs. Gaskill was thrown to the concrete roadway. She struck her head on the hard pavement and was rendered unconscious. Gaskill picked up his wife and rushed her to a Trenton hospital. She died soon after arrival at the institution.

Coroner Elmer A. Kemp viewed the body and had it taken to his morgue where County Physician Mitchell held an autopsy and found that death was due to a fractured skull.

Columbus State Police arrested Gaskill on a technical charge of manslaughter and he was held under $1,000 bail for the Grand Jury.

AIR LEADERS PREDICT BOOM IN AVIATION

Manufacturers Confident That Summer Will See Revival of Business

INDUSTRY NOW IN SLUMP

By Homer H. Metz
I. N. S. Aviation Editor

NEW YORK, June 23.—Airplane manufacturers and other aeronautical leaders are confident that the current summer will see the emergence of the aviation industry from the doldrums that gripped it during the past year.

Last winter the slump in the industry was blamed principally on over-production, although it was freely admitted that there were other contributory causes.

At the present moment, manufacturers confidently declared that the evil of over-production has been eliminated. The number of airplanes turned out nowadays is governed entirely by the condition of the market. In other words, if Mr. Jones places an order with Biplanes, Inc., for two airplanes, Biplanes, Inc., will build two airplanes and not three.

In addition, many of the smaller companies, who were making airplanes last year have now either gone to the wall or been absorbed by larger and more powerful companies. The recent Air Show at Madison Square Garden in New York gave striking evidence of the decrease in the number of manufacturers.

Moreover, there seems to be more interest in aviation among the laymen this year than there was last year. It is a different sort of an interest that the man in the streets is displaying towards air travel now. Whereas he formerly looked upon air flights in the nature of stunts, thrilling spectacles, he now looks upon them with a weather eye cocked to their commercial and practical possibilities. Casey Jones, old time race flyer, and now president of the Curtiss-Wright Corporation, issued a statement recently in which he declared that the number of student aviators, being trained by his firm was increasing by leaps and bounds.

It takes no great foresight to see that an increased number of pilots makes for an increased number of airplanes, and consequently increased business for the industry.

An analogy is drawn by many aviation leaders between the automobile industry in the early stages of its development and the aviation industry at the present time. It will be remembered that the automobile manufacturers ran afoul of the pitfall of over-production, but subsequently overcame it and allowed their business to expand to its present substantial proportions by easy stages. Aviation leaders now expect the business of manufacturing, selling and flying airplanes to do the same.

"WE" ARE NOW "THREE," WITH ARRIVAL OF BABY SON FOR COL. AND MRS. LINDBERGH; "EAGLET" ARRIVES ON HIS MOTHER'S 24TH BIRTHDAY

Speculation Now On As to What Name Will Be Bestowed Upon the Son of Famed Flier — Dwight Morrow Jubilant Over Fact of Grandfatherhood

By James L. Kilgallen

ENGLEWOOD, N. J., June 23.—Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh is today the proud "dad" of a son.

"We" are now "three," the baby, a fairly lusty infant, was born at 3.15 yesterday afternoon. He weighed seven and three-quarters pounds. And, by a happy coincidence, the stork arrived on Mrs. Lindbergh's twenty-fourth birthday.

Both Mrs. Lindbergh and the baby were reported in fine condition this morning. The mother is the former Anne Morrow, daughter of Ambassador and Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow.

The baby was born in the palatial Morrow mansion where Mrs. Lindbergh first saw the light exactly twenty-four years ago yesterday.

Speculation was rife today as to what name Anne and "Lindy" would give the child. Two of the best guesses were Dwight Morrow Lindbergh and Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr.

The famous "Lone Eagle" is said to have taken the event calmly. He had no comment to make regarding the arrival of the "Eaglet."

Ambassador Morrow, however, was jubilant. Shortly after the baby was born he went to the home of Douglas Thompson, former mayor of Englewood, and exclaimed:

"I'm a grand-daddy! Isn't that great news?"

Ambassador Morrow was more excited over the arrival of the baby than he was over his recent victory at the polls when he was nominated to Republican candidate for United States Senator from New Jersey.

"They say the baby looks like his father," one of the Morrow servants told waiting reporters.

Mr. and Mrs. Lindbergh were married May 27, 1929. They have become known as the perfect air couple. They made many flights together.

INDEPENDENTS DOWN THE CROYDON BOYS' CLUB, 6-2

Seven of Winners' Base Blows
Are Good for Extra
Bases

KOHLER HAS CINCH

Schedule For Tonight
FEDERALS vs. EMILIE
Result of Yesterday
Independents, 6; Croydon, 2

CROYDON, June 23.—Collecting eleven timely hits behind the invincible pitching of "Smokey Joe" Kohler, the Independents won their fifth victory of the Bristol Twilight League here yesterday beating the Croydon Boys' Club, 6-2.

Summarizing the total of base blows for the winners it was found that seven of the hits were good for extra bases. F. Hibbs, L. Hibbs, Kohler, Jones and Lasprella made two base hits. H. Morrell, recently released from the Emilie Y. M. A., connected for a triple while Lasprella made the second home run of the Bristol Twilight League when his drive in the eighth inning was lost in the grass in right field.

Kohler had an easy time out on the mound, allowing but five hits and striking out sixteen batters. Every batter on the Croydon team with the exception of Trischler fanned at least once by the curves of Kohler. Trischler showed a fine batting eye waiting for three passes and making a safe single. Parrell was the hardest batter for Kohler. Three times this man batted out safe hits and on his last appearance at the bat he drove in the only Croydon runs of the game.

Gus Avella and Lasprella were the best hitters for the "Indies," Avella getting three out of four, and Lasprella two out of three, a double and home run.

"Shorty" Stromp handled nine chances at shortstop for the losers and did not have a flaw. He saved the Croydon hurler many times by coming up with hot grounders that would have meant runs had not the ball been stopped.

With two gone in the first, the Indies scored once on a double by L. Hibbs and a single by Avella. L. Hibbs followed with another double but Avella was held up at third and Kohler grounded out.

After five scoreless frames, the Independents counted a trio of runs in the seventh. Kohler was safe when Bock dropped his fly; Lasprella doubled to left, scoring Kohler; Jones fanned. Gleason errored on Gaffney's roller; Morrell tripped to center, registering Lasprella and Gaffney; Tulio struck out and F. Hibbs hit to Gleason and was out at first.

The fifth and sixth runs of the winners were scored in the eighth. G. Avella flied out and L. Hibbs rolled out. Kohler then got a safe hit to

World Is Becoming "Dirigible Minded"

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN
International News Service Staff
Correspondent

NEW YORK, June 23.—Success of the spectacular Graf Zeppelin flights have made the world "dirigible minded."

No matter how conservative many people are the question of making airplane trips, the safety of dirigible travel has been made so apparent by Commander Hugo Eckener and his Graf Zeppelin that it is difficult to find anybody who would not take a chance on riding in a "zep." This fact augurs well for the future of trans-Atlantic dirigible service, which Dr. Eckener regards as only about two years away.

The Graf Zeppelin may be the forerunner of a fleet of dirigibles that will operate between Europe and the United States, Europe and South America and between the North American and South America, not to mention trans-Pacific voyages.

It is significant that when the Graf Zeppelin docked at Lakehurst, N. J., on May 31st last, on its epochal trans-continental journey, from Friedrichshafen, Germany, to Spain, to South America, to the United States and back to Europe, her arrival attracted only casual attention. This was in marked contrast to her previous visit to Lakehurst, or to the arrival of the ZR-3 (now the Los Angeles) at Lakehurst from Friedrichshafen four or five years ago. Some time ago, the Graf was a novelty; now it is an accepted commercial airship.

On Commander Eckener's last journey over the eastern section of the United States, after having come up from South America, he attracted no unusual interest except for the night flight over New York City where millions, standing in the streets, were powerfully struck by the Graf Zeppelin's possibilities. For, with motors roaring rhythmically, and flying low over the city's skyscrapers, the Graf presented not only a spectacular sight but stood out as a great, practical contrivance for carrying passengers over long distances and through all kinds of weather.

The big ship had only a few nights before passed through severe equatorial squalls. She was shooting back to her home port at Friedrichshafen on schedule time. She made the distance from Lakehurst to Seville, Spain, in slightly more than the fifty hours predicted by Dr. Eckener although he encountered storms off the coast of Europe.

Germany will soon have a dirigible bigger than the Graf Zeppelin. The United States has kept abreast of the times, too. Two huge American dirigibles are being built at Akron, Ohio. Great Britain has the dirigibles R-100 and the R-101. The R-100 is scheduled to make a trans-Atlantic flight soon, from Cardington, England, to St. Hubert's airport, near Montreal, Quebec. South America has become distinctly dirigible minded, since the visit of the Graf Zeppelin, and there is talk of a dirigible service from North America to South America.

Indications are multiplying in all parts of the world that point to a great future for the dirigible industry. The time is not far distant, many believe, when the arrival and departure of dirigibles will attract no more attention than do the big ocean liners.

The public's attitude toward dirigible travel was manifest at Lakehurst a few weeks ago when the Graf Zeppelin was berthed in the huge hanger there for a few days. Nearly all of the visitors who wended their way into the hanger to peer at the silver sides of the big ship expressed a wish that they might be fortunate enough to have the luck to make a dirigible flight. And many of these people had never been off the ground.

Present Miss Brady With Cogswell Chair

In appreciation of her years of faithful service to the Bristol public schools Miss Anna Brady was presented with a Cogswell chair on Friday, the piece being a gift from the many teachers connected with the local public school faculties.

The presentation was made to Miss Brady by Miss Mary King in the presence of several of the other teachers who have served in the Bristol schools for a number of years.

The gift was taken to Miss Brady's room in the private hospital of Dr. J. Fred Wagner, here, where the one who has taught for 45 years is recuperating from injuries sustained in an automobile accident.

Contributions were made for the gift by all of the teachers of the several public schools, as a token of their appreciation of "Miss Anna's" years of service.

During her period of teaching Miss Brady has been in charge of second and third grade pupils, being located for nearly all of the 45 years at the Wood street school building. Some months ago she decided to retire at the end of her 45th term.

There are over 2,000 children who have been in her classes, and those who have grown to manhood and womanhood retain pleasant memories of their school days under her teaching.

MISS MARY ROSETTY WEDS JOHN P. FERRARO

Attractive Wedding Performed in St. Ann's Italian
Catholic Church

NOW ON HONEYMOON

A very beautiful wedding occurred at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon in St. Ann's Catholic Church, when Miss Mary Ann Rosetty, who resides with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Gaetano Greco, of 337 Jefferson avenue, became the bride of John P. Ferraro, son of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Ferraro, of 410 Dorrance street. Father Marcelino Romagnolo, O. S. S. T., assistant rector of the church, performed the ceremony, and the wedding mass was played by Miss Frances Tamburilla, of Dorrance street. During the ceremony Miss Elizabeth McGee, of Philadelphia, sang "Oh Promise Me."

Miss Rosetty was attended by her sister, Miss Helen C. Rosetty, Philadelphia, as matron of honor, and Miss Rachel Cianciosi, 323 Grand avenue, and Miss Anna Ferraro, of Dorrance street, sister of the groom, were bridesmaids. Little Gloria Greco, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gaetano Greco, of Jefferson avenue, and cousin of the bride, was flower girl, and Samuel Gesualdi, son of Mr. and Mrs. Patsy Gesualdi, of Dorrance street, and nephew of the groom, was ring-bearer. Attending Mr. Ferraro as best man was John Haney, of Philadelphia, and the ushers were Nicholas Ferraro, of Dorrance street, brother of the groom, and Nicholas Scurti, of Pond street.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. Gaetano Greco, was attired in a beautiful gown of white bridal satin. The close-fitting bodice fashioned on princess lines, was sleeveless and the neckline was V-shape, cut lower in the back than in the front. In the front of the bodice were a few tiny tucks and the edge of both front and back was cut round, to which was attached a semi-circular skirt forming graceful folds and cut very long. A large satin flower was caught at the waistline on the left side. She wore white moire slippers, silk stockings and long white silk gloves. The bridal veil of tulle, edged with rose point lace and five yards long, was cap shape trimmed with orange blossoms on each side and ended in cape effect in the back. The bride wore pearls around her neck and carried a shower bouquet of white roses, lilies of the valley and orchids.

The maid of honor, Miss Helen Rosetty, looked attractive in a yellow chiffon dress, made bodice effect, sleeveless, and had a bertha collar in the back, which extended over the shoulder. Two small rosettes of the material, one in the back and one in the front of the bodice, were the only trimming on the dress, and the skirt was long and full, ending in the uneven hemline. She wore a Greta Garbo horsehair hat trimmed with maline and satin slippers to match her dress, flesh-colored stockings and carried a shower bouquet of yellow roses.

Miss Cianciosi and Miss Ferraro, the bridesmaids, wore dresses made exactly alike, only in different colors, the former wearing pink and the latter attired in peach. The bodice of each dress was made of heavy crepe, sleeveless, V-shape neckline, and shirring at the waistline. The skirts were made of tulle, the hemline ending in long points. They wore Greta Garbo hats trimmed with maline, and satin slippers to match their dresses, flesh-colored stockings, and each carried a shower bouquet of pink roses.

The little flower girl, Gloria Greco, wore a dainty yellow flat crepe dress made sleeveless and had a round neckline. The only trimming on her dress were three little rosettes of yellow

Johnson was inclined to fight but was soon quieted by the police who demonstrated that they meant business.

Both Johnson and the Watson woman were given hearings yesterday and each was held under $500 bail for court.

HUNCHES

If you feel you have a hunch you have a scientific basis for it, Dr. Arthur Holmes, professor of psychology at the University of Pennsylvania, says a hunch is apt to be right in 75 per cent of cases. He tells why. A hunch probably comes from your apperceptive mass, or collection of things you have seen or done, he says, long since forgotten. You are unaware that such things are guiding you, but that does not make them any less powerful. The larger the store the sub-conscious one has to draw on the more hunches one will be likely to have and the nearer right they will be.

If Dr. Holmes be right, the claim to a hunch is not evidence of superstition so much as ability to call experience to one's aid in an emergency. A hunch is an intuitive appreciation of a condition, of which one is confident, but which is lacking in tangible demonstration. If we proceed according to the hunch and it turns out as we hope it is proof that we called to our aid powers we possess, but so deeply submerged that we are unconscious of their existence.

However, careful notation by the individual of the extent to which his hunches have proved right would influence the degree to which one is warranted in indulging. If the hunch turns out badly, maybe it wasn't a hunch but an instance of mistaken identity. Doubtless it is needful to make few mistakes in recognizing hunches, if one risk much.

TRUTHS SELF-EVIDENT

In the preamble to a deathless charter of human liberties those who framed and phrased it invoked certain principles whose truth was declared self-evident. Seek for a statement of civic faith wide enough to encompass all sorts and conditions of men and enduring enough to withstand the centuries, they turned first to those verities which all men instinctively accept and to the axioms of human life which ask no argument in their favor.

The human mind is built and human conduct fashioned around such self-evident truths. We do not turn over to debate the fundamental articles of our faith. They ring true in our hearts and are right in our eyes, whether or not our reason is competent to define or defend them. On lesser matters there is dispute or debate, but the convictions which most intimately control our conduct and frame our philosophy are based on truths which seem to us self-evident. Skepticism sometimes shakes them, but generally they outlive the doubt that assails them. In time of trial and distress we turn to them gladly, finding them better comfort and more certain guidance than all the ingenious products of laborious reason.

Such faith in self-evident truth is the universal stamp of humanity. It is the basis of all unity among men, which would otherwise be perpetually torn asunder by differences of opinion and interpretation. It is the faith which men will defend to the death, the faith that endures despite all darkness and doubt. It is faith in those things which men see to be true and for which they therefore need no proof.

"The only reliable thing about some people is their unreliability."

GEOLOGICAL FORMATION OF SOUTHERN BUCKS COUNTY

Rock Outcrops and Strata Tell Interesting Story to Those Who Read Nature's Record of Past Ages

A paper read at the Spring Meeting of the Bucks County Natural Science Association, May 31, 1930, at the Woodman Mansion, Bridgeville, Pa., by Edward R. Barnsley, Assistant State Geologist.

The speaker deems it especially fitting on this occasion to present a short paper on geology to the Natural Science Association, because in this old Woodman home-stead lived Mr. Horace Woodman, who through self-education became in his time a well known local geologist, and as far as is known the only native of the southern part of our county who has ever attempted to read the history of the rocks in a scientific way. Besides paying tribute to his memory the speaker feels that it is time to present a paper on geology because this science is probably the least known of all the natural sciences, and yet it is time in the life of our society the oldest, and even inclusive of the rest. As in most nature clubs this newest yet oldest study has been given a subordinate place partially because biologists, botanists and ichthyologists predominate, and partly because the nature loving layman is frightened away by a few large words and difficult explanation of what to him are simple facts.

The geology of Bucks County, and particularly that of the southern portion about which we are most familiar, is relatively complex and hence, challenges the investigator to unravel its puzzling problems. To get at the truth of the problem is difficult because the country is under a high state of cultivation, and the rock outcrops are few, and although frequently exposed in road cuts are usually of such a friable nature that within a few years they break down into sandy soil. The cliffs along our major streams, and an occasional well record, afford the only means we have of determining the under-ground structure of the beds.

In general southern Bucks County may be divided into three belts, the gravel, the crystalline, and the bed-rock. Along the southern portion is a wedge shape band of gravel which is 5 miles across from Morrisville to the Manor, but narrows to half a mile at Piquessing Creek. This gravel deposit is the Cape May formation, being of the early Pleistocene or Ice Age period. In places it reaches a depth of at least 60 feet as at Wheat Sheaf, but usually does not exceed 30 feet which is the limit to which it can be dredged. By far the largest tonnage of sand and gravel shipped into the Philadelphia market territory comes from this region. One plant at Tullytown has the largest single unit in the sand and gravel industry anywhere, having an actual productive capacity of 1,000 tons per hour from one digger dredge. But even at such a tremendous rate as that, with barges and freight cars hauling it away night and day, it will take many years until the waters of the Delaware have flooded over Falls and Bristol township. Only half of the deposit consists of good gravel, the balance being sand and sand-slay mixture; and of the total gravel 20 per cent has to be crushed down to 1 1/2 inches which is the largest market size.

North of this gravel belt is an area of crystalline rocks that extends from Newportville to the Cut Off railroad, a quarter mile south of here. These ancient schists, mica gneiss, gabbros, and marbles composing this group are considered to belong to the oldest rocks in the world, and they represent the core or roots of once lofty mountains which now have been leveled down thousands of feet until only humble little Langhorne hill denotes to the automobilist that he is climbing up to these harder rocks which in Maryland and Virginia form a low wide rolling plateau known as the Piedmont. The sharp turn in the Neshaunim Creek just a little ways below is additional evidence of the resistant character of these rocks, for here the creek although flowing SE is forced to turn an angle of over 300 degrees and flow due west for 2 miles at which place it finally gets sufficient courage to break through the barrier and flow on to the Delaware at Croydon Falls in the Susquehanna, Neshaunim Falls, and the Falls of Trenton, all done. The falls of the Potomac, Amos mark the line of break where the rivers make falls or rapids in descending from the hard rock of the Piedmont to the softer gravels of the Coastal plane.

It may surprise many to learn that the oldest graphite mine in Pennsylvania is located in these rocks three-quarters of a mile north of Trevoze. It was opened about 1750 but outside of a shaft of unknown depth little is known concerning the operations as it was soon abandoned.

Above this region is a wide belt of reddish sandstones and shales that extend from here to Durham Hills, unbroken except for Buckingham Valley which is limestone. After these rocks were stratified in the Triassic sea there were squeezed into them molten lavas, called trap rock, which later on after the area had been uplifted, were exposed by erosion and formed small hills due to its very tough nature. Examples of these may be seen at Jericho Mountain, Bowman's Hill, Solebury Mountain, Rock Hill, and Haycock Mountain. The red shales as well as the limestone, and the hard white sandstone known as quartzite making Buckingham Mountain were probably all derived from the mountains whose remains may now be seen south of us, and which probably extended to the present Atlantic shore line. On the whole, the red beds are uninteresting except to the specialist for only rarely are minerals or fossils found in them. However, for several years a lead mine was operated at New Galena in New Britain Township, and fine samples of alena (lead sulphide) may still be obtained from the old dump. Also there

SYNOPSIS

Dawn, mystery girl, is selected by the black tribe to be the virgin bride of their terrible god. She is chained all night to a spot in the jungle; next morning she will be sacred and inviolate. She loves and is loved by Tom Allen, plantation owner, who has overheard a secret that she is as white as himself. Shep, a brutish bully, with sinister designs on Dawn, plans to execute them while she is chained in the ritual. Tom and Shep have a fierce fist and whip fight, with Tom victor. He implores Dawn to be his. Back in camp, Shep, badly bruised, concocts a story to Captain Eric that Tom had waylaid Dawn, and attacked him.

INSTALLMENT FIFTEEN

When sunrise flooded the jungle clearing it found Dawn again chained in symbolic enslavement to Malunghu. Her first thought was of Tom. When he had left her in the darkness he had promised to remain nearby through the night. He had laughed away her warnings that he might be found by early arriving natives.

The sleepless vigil, together with the other anxieties of the night, left her quite exhausted. She longed for companionship, above all the companionship of Tom. Her eyes ranged the clearing, but Tom was not to be seen. Though she tried to convince herself that Tom had sought refuge in the jungle, she was unable to free herself of a feeling that he had proceeded to toward his camp, his thoughts on the breakfast he would be so heartily able to appreciate. Rounding a turn in the trail he beheld a few yards ahead a guard detail coming towards him.

He paused and attempted to identify its personnel. He thought he recognized Blink, his one-time foreman, among them. As the squad came nearer he saw it was Blink. But he failed to perceive Shep among the men.

"Good morning, Blink," Tom greeted him cheerfully, "lovely jungle sunrise, isn't it?" Blink murmured a return greeting, then glanced uneasily toward Shep. The Black, obviously in command, looked at Tom uncertainly. Even though invested with authority over the white man, and assured the physical support of his guardsmen, he had too fresh a recollection of the beating he had endured to gloat over his prisoner.

"You is under arrest," he managed to say.

Tom's surprise was genuine. "I am," he asked, looking incredulous at Blink.

The American nodded. "Captain Eric's order," he explained briefly. He turned to Shep to permit him to apprise Tom of the charge, but Shep hurriedly manifested a wish to transfer the speaking role to him.

Blink came nearer to Tom. "It was that black renegade," he said in a low voice, "that spilled the beans. He got to Eric with some story that got the captain worried. You'll be all right when we get back to camp."

Tom addressed his words to Blink, but looked steadily at Shep as he spoke. "I'll willingly submit arrest to you, Blink, but if this detail is commanded by anybody else I'll resist capture with my last drop of blood."

All turned to Shep, awaiting his reply to the challenge. His instinctive impulse to take advantage of his power to club Tom to death died under the steady glare of the Englishman. He shrugged in the manner of a man making a magnificent gesture.

"I yields de command to you, Blink," he said. "I'se interested in carryin' out de captain's orders, dat's all."

Though it seemed much the wiser way out of a ticklish situation Blink hesitated to take command. "After all," he protested to Tom, "how am I goin' to look dragging you in as a prisoner, Tom. War is war, I know, but I ain't capturing my best friend for any government."

To make his defeat as inglorious as possible, Shep divided the guard, assigning two to himself and two to Blink. "We've got other things to do," he commented, with a feeble flash of bravado, "you take de prisoner in, Blink."

As Shep and his Askari detail started off Tom took his station between Blink's guards. "All right, Blink," he said gaily, "let's get on. You'll be a hero—bringing the dangerous prisoner to justice right out in broad daylight."

"I wish I had a mask to wear," grumbled Blink.

There was high excitement at German Military Headquarters. Captain Eric had selected the ten prisoners to be returned to England, and their cheery songs of home mingled with the curses of those who were doomed to remain behind. In the barracks the fortunate ten stood, their kits packed, awaiting marching orders.

"Any messages for the gals around Buckingham Palace?" called a grinning youth to a sour-faced fellow who had hoped that his tale of a mythical wife in Kent would speed his release.

"I say," exclaimed the exuberant Duke, "I can just see myself taking a jolly pot at those grouse in Sussex."

"I hope a grouse kicks you in the belly," said another of the disappointed group with inelegant fervency.

"For that you don't get the picture post card showing me strolling in the Strand," returned Duke. "Ach!ung!" At the German officer's command, the men came smartly to attention, and, in two squads of five men each, trooped out of the barracks. They broke ranks in front of the Headquarters building just as Blink brought Tom in with the two Askari guards. These two relaxed their vigilance at word from Blink, and Tom dropped into a chair on the veranda.

When Eric emerged with Blink, Tom rose and saluted. He ventured a friendly smile, but Eric's brisk formality discouraged it.

"A fine mess you've made," Eric began severely.

"Since you doubtless acted on Shep's story," answered Tom, "I think perhaps you'd like to hear mine."

The muscles of Eric's face tightened. "There's only one thing I want to hear," he said impersonally. "Is it true that you saw Dawn last night?"

the camp. It was possible that upon reflection he had decided upon a discreet retreat. A fear of summoning prowling natives prevented her from calling out to him. Neither was she willing to wake him from sleep he so sorely needed. But when, a few moments later, she heard him singing in the nearby thicket, her joy was boundless. It was her song, a ballad he composed in her name and which he sang to her alone:

"Dawn—that's the name we chose for you."

Dawn, every sunrise glows for you; Daylight, it never breaks until little Dawn Awakes to drive the dark of the night life."

Soon she saw him standing on the edge of the thickets smiling at her. She called softly to him. Now that her wish to see him had been fulfilled, she had quick fears for his safety. At sunrise she knew the male would join her. Tom must hurry away.

He swept her into his arms and kissed her repeatedly.

"Tom," she, soberly, "they are coming for me. See," she cried, suddenly, pointing off into the distance. "Their boats. There, at the bend in the river."

Tom nodded slowly and sighed. "Yes. You will go with them?" She stared toward the river. "Yes. I will go with them. If they know—they would kill you. They would kill both of us."

"But Dawn," he cried passionately, "I would rather die than lose you!"

"I am not thinking of myself. It is your people I think of."

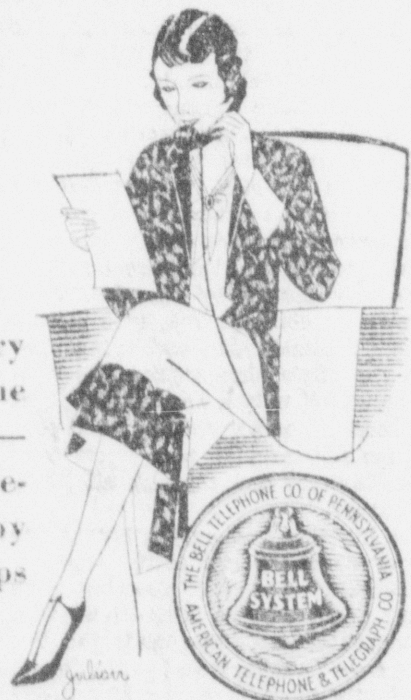

Despairing of taking Dawn from her people, Tom did not press his arguments of the night before. He was resigned to losing her—but not forever. "I will come back for you, Dawn," he swore. "I will not give you up."

Before Dawn could answer they heard the chanting of the natives as they approached the clearing. Quickly Tom seized her in final embrace. "You will come back," pleaded Dawn, reluctant to release him. "But go now quickly." Tom pressed her hand in silence and hurried into the jungle.

An hour of troublesome going through the dense foliage delivered him to the trail whence he and Pigeon had wandered into the night's events. He swung jauntily

GOVERNMENT CONTROL

The Dominion of Canada, through its Bureau of Statistics, has issued a bulletin which removes all justification for support of government sale of liquor on the grounds of "temperance" or "moderation."

The official Dominion figures show the Canadians have increased spending for liquor from $30,000,000 in 1922 to more than $100,000,000 last year; that the sale of whiskey instead of being retarded by the popularizing of beer and wine, has increased more than 60% in the last two years and is increasing more rapidly than the sale of beer and wine; that drunkenness is increasing. Ontario, for instance, convicted 13,700 drunks in 1926 and 16,000 two years later. Deaths from alcoholism in Canada have more than doubled since 1921. Convictions for drunken driving in Canada increased thirteen hundred per cent in the six liquor control years. Motor accidents show almost a doubled death toll in four years. Bootlegging, illicit distilling and home brewing are still active, in spite of government restrictions.

All of the increases are in greater proportion than the Canadian increase in traffic, or population and must be laid to the fact that intoxicating liquor from a government bottle is just as dangerous as from any other bottle. — Col. P. H. Callahan, Chairman of the Co-operative Committee for Prohibition Enforcement. (Adv.)

"BILL" TILDEN, 3RD,
CARRIES ON TRADITION

NEW YORK, June 21—(INS)—As far as tennis is concerned, the name of Tilden is going to keep roll, roll, rolling along.

It seems there was always a racket in the Tilden family and in 1918 Big Bill Tilden 2nd prolonged the family's name in this sport by his almost meteoric rise to tennis heights.

In that season Big Bill finished right behind William Johnston of California, in the singles matches, a very fair star for a youth of 25 just acclimating himself to the art of the court. At the age of 27 Big Bill annexed his initial national singles championship in 1920, and the name of Tilden echoed throughout the land.

Many may wonder how Big Bill became the man he turned out to be in so short a time, if you consider three years of real preparation for tennis supremacy a brief period. The answer is Herbert M. Tilden, elder brother of Big Bill.

Herbert passed on in 1915 but prior to this year he tutored his younger brother and showed him how to correct every fault on the court. It was believed by all except Herb himself that the elder Tilden was the better tennis player of the two but this will always remain a matter of conjecture for Herb was satisfied to merely equip Big Bill with every bit of knowledge he had extracted from the game.

It was only natural, then, that Big Bill, out of courtesy to the man who had imparted a thorough knowledge of the court to him, turn around and foster his elder brother's son as his protege. This youth, William T. Tilden, 3rd, evinced an early determination to carry on for the family in tennis circles.

den, 3rd, evinced an early determination to carry on for the family in tennis circles.

But Big Bill, 2nd, has been a very busy man of late with his rather surprising comeback attempt and has deserted his nephew for the time being, at present the famous Tilden's contributions to Bill, 3rd's efforts are the numerous tennis racquets he sends him. After Big Bill uses his weapons four times, little Bill falls heir to them. But adherents of the younger Tilden are now awaiting the time when his illustrious uncle will settle down and teach the gritty novice something of the art that won for him world wide laurels.

At such time, and probably not before, tennis enthusiasts who find thrills in family successors will surely themselves with another and possibly better Tilden.

Little Bill, 3rd, is not as small as name would suggest. He is rankly overgrown for his age but he is so well proportioned that the 175 pounds he totes around and his six feet one inch in height have neither retarded his speed nor hampered his bodily movements. So at sixteen, little Bill is really big Bill, and in many ways does he resemble the man from whom he draws his name.

At 16 Big Bill Tilden, 2nd, was the typical gangling country youngster, lankier in form, and far lighter, but the latest Bill's counterpart in inherent features. The same drawn out face, deep-set black eyes, and the identical side-part of the hair all are reflected in Big Bill, 3rd. Only the outstanding chin of the elder Tilden is missing. Those interested in fashion highlights would also include another difference in mold. Big Bill, 3rd, wears knickers when he plays.

During the season just ended little Bill cavorted for the Haverford, Pa., high school tennis team in the number one post. His exhibitions were nothing to drive one into hysterics but his is a supreme ambition—to emulate his uncle.

Bill, 3rd, is usually embarrassed when spectators expect him to prove himself vertically and horizontally representative of the six letters in the name now universally recognized. "If I make a few mistakes," Bill, 3rd, claims, "they instantly declare that I'll never be the man my uncle became. But they forgot one thing. At my age Uncle Bill was not much better than I am now. He used to regard fellows like Dick Williams, Wallace Johnson and others just as I regard him now. It seemed that uncle attained championship heights overnight, and maybe I'm destined for the same thing.

"Whether or not I'll reach the top," the youth continued with a knowing grin, "is entirely up to myself. But I'm trying, and trying mighty hard."

Gloria carried a basket filled with various mixed flowers to blend with her dress.

A reception was held in St. Ann's Hall, Logan street, beginning at 6 o'clock. There were between four and five hundred guests present. The hall was attractively decorated with palms, ferns and cut flowers, and Delia's Orchestra furnished the music for the dancing. During the evening refreshments were served to the guests. At the bridal table, a large wedding cake weighing 75 pounds, beautifully decorated, formed the centerpiece.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferraro left last evening on a honeymoon trip to Niagara Falls and vicinity, and will be away one week. Mrs. Ferraro's travelling costume was a yellow shantung ensemble suit, with light tan slippers, stockings, hat and bag to match, and she carried a green coat trimmed with a cape collar, edged with gray fur. Upon their return, Mr. and Mrs. Ferraro will make their home at 2829 North Palethorpe street, Philadelphia.

There were many out-of-town guests attending the wedding, coming from Philadelphia, Ambler, Norristown, Chestnut Hill, Erdenheim, Flourtown, Trenton and Brooklyn. Among the many guests were Lieut. Giuseppe Zappata and wife, Lieut. Zappata is Royal Italian Consul of Wilmington, Delaware.

Hidden Killer Impulse of Cyanide Murderer
Traced to Glands Man No Longer Needs

Is the impulse to kill secreted in some gland hidden in the bodies of civilized men?

Arthur Hoerl, criminologist and writer of mystery stories, believes from long observation and experience that all men have such a gland but that it has become dormant in most cases as civilization has progressed.

He cites James Baker, 23 year old self-confessed murderer of 10 men, as the perfect example of the primitive type of murderer for whom science has as yet found no name, the fiend who kills for no reason other than a desire to watch the death agony of his victim. Baker is now serving a life-term in Sing Sing prison.

"Scientific reformers are urging segregation of criminal types as a first means of eliminating the prison break menace," Mr. Hoerl asserts. "With criminal types clearly defined this would be a simple and effective method for erasing trouble."

"However, too many inmates do not fall easily into a classified group. The James Baker 'impulse criminals' form a large part of our prisoners today and until intelligent study is made of their problems and some effort is made to classify them there will always be prison uprisings and mutinies."

In story and in real life there must always be a motive for crimes, Mr. Hoerl states. That is an axiom by which civilization measures its criminals. Yet such crimes as James Baker committed are brought about through no such simple motive as money, vengeance, or love.

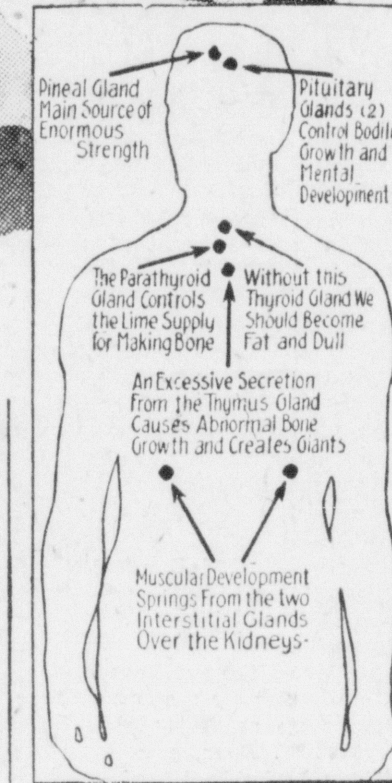

What mysterious impulse lies behind the tragic urge to kill?

"The old bromide that truth is stranger than fiction tells the story again," Mr. Hoerl declares. "In the literature of crime there was only one author with imagination of sufficient vividness to create a character analogous to James Baker. He was an outstanding genius; his story in which the Baker-like character appears is a classic."

"The author is Edgar Allan Poe. This tale is 'Murders in the Rue Morgue.' The character is an ape!" That James Baker might easily have been the assassin in "Murders in the Rue Morgue" is Mr. Hoerl's contention. The writer feels the secret of Baker and his type lies in this same animal instinct, due to the presence in the human body of disordered glands or organs.

"Science has proven that there are in the human body today certain organs and glands which are not used," Mr. Hoerl reminds us. "With the development of civilization they have outlived their usefulness, have ceased to function. The tonsils and the appendix are two instances of this."

"Is there some still undiscovered organ or gland which sends the impulse to kill to the human brains? There is something in our intricate makeup which controls our emotions and brings about love, hatred, and rage. When we sorrow a gland releases tears. In a moment of rage cannot some over-developed gland advance an emotion to the impulse to kill? 'Uncontrollable rage' is a common affliction. The records of killings under such stress are common."

Mr. Hoerl, author of a series of stories called "Master Mysteries," is of the opinion that the popularity of so-called detective stories has had a salutary effect, in that reading of this type of fiction has caused laymen to give more thought to the problem of crime. "The public must be made to see that eradication of crime is not simply a matter of punishment, but of prevention. And crime cannot be prevented except through removing the causes of it. We cannot eliminate these until we apply more of the principles of science to the study of criminals."
